Just of indicators of self-assessment of excellence He spoke yesterday during a link held via between some of the members of the Cedifop staff and the heads of the ETF (European Training Foundation), the agency of the, EU agency that helps training centres become points of excellence in education, training and labour market systems.

The meeting, promoted by ETF, was attended by: Manos Kouvakis, director of Cedifop; Julian Stanley, Senior Expert in ETF Human Capital Development; Sotiria Tsalamani, EU Project Manager EVBB (European Association of Vocational Training Institutes); Daniele Fano, founder of St Skills Together; Marco Salafia, computer technician; Ivan Napoli and Francesco Costantino, Cedifop professors; Jolien van Uden, Senior Expert Coordinator of ETF Professional Excellence.

The role of the ETF is based on the expertise of its staff and the experience gained over 30 years of working alongside governments, businesses and social partners whose main objective, through a range of evidence-based methodologies, is to support the process of education, training and labour market reform.

In the course of the meeting, Julian Stanley showed in video the results of the benchmarks built by Cedifop. "For us, it was a good test for the new application and Cedifop stands out very well," Stanley said. "Self-assessment is a real revolution," Daniele Fano pointed out, "thanks to which we ask ourselves how we are and how and where we can improve in operating in our daily work. An internal perspective that helps to put order to a series of indicators". Ivan Napoli, a lecturer at Cedifop, said: "I found the proposed indicators absolutely valid and in line with what is required by the business world for study-work transitions. Manos Kouvakis pointed out that: "ETF has provided us with a 'checklist' to continue growing".
